Wisconsin AIHA Program Announcement

Topic: Legionnaires disease: Finally on the radar of Public Health

Legionnaires disease is a deadly but preventable disease that is increasing across the US. Public health agencies have historically considered this disease low priority, and have only responded after disease has occurred. Recent events are changing that policy and new guidelines will provide IH's the information to finally prevent this disease.

Speaker: Brian G. Shelton, M.P.H., President and CEO

During his career with PathCon, Shelton has directed numerous high-profile investigations, including those involving Legionnaires' disease, Norovirus and Anthrax. In his work with Legionella bacteria, Shelton was the first to show an association between Legionella concentrations and risk of disease in cooling towers. The company's hazard criteria guidelines for Legionnaires' disease outbreaks has been adopted by OSHA as its standard; as well, his interpretive criteria is the basis for many other health agencies around the world. Shelton was also the first to link a decorative fountain to a Legionnaires' disease outbreak. Under Shelton's guidance, PathCon played a vital role in the discovery of Anthrax-contaminated news media facilities in New York City and U.S. Postal facilities around the country after the 9-11 attacks – including the Brentwood Postal Distribution Center in Washington, D.C. Shelton received his M.P.H. in Epidemiology from Emory University in Atlanta, and his B.Sc. degree in Microbiology from the University of Guelph, Ontario, Canada. He is a member of the American Industrial Hygiene Association and chaired its Indoor Environmental Quality Committee in 2001.
